CORRESPONDENCE

Letter from Elder Nephi M. Savage.
Concluded.

Greenfield's Bend, Maury Co.,
Tenn. August 26, 1896.
To the Editor of the Union.

When day dawned, we were on the desolate water-lands of Wyoming, and it appeared to me to be the most forsaken region my eye has ever rested upon. About noon, we passed the Ames monument, erected by the Ames Bros, of Boston, marking the highest point on the U. P. road in crossing the Rocky Mountain divide. About 3 p. m. we reached Cheyenne, a desolate, dirty looking city, and at 6 p. m., we reached Denver, on the other hand one of the cleanest cities in the U. S. In an hour or two, we passed from the region of perpetual snow to where summer reigned, and the people were dressed in their summer clothes.

The stay in Denver was about three hours, so most of the Elders took a street car to the park, which is a delightful place.

The second night I was so worn out that I had no difficulty in sleeping soundly until the dawn of day. On opening my eyes they rested on the plains of Kansas. The vegetation of awakening spring had just emerged from a refreshing bath of rain, and the sight was pleasing to gaze upon in contrast with the dreary landscape which met our eyes all the live-long day before. All that day we were speeding eastward through the state of Kansas and arrived at Kansas City, just across the Missouri State line about six o'clock.

Notwithstanding it was raining when we arrived there, a few of the Elders took a car to Independence to visit the Temple site, and although I would have wished a longer stay than they had, I should have accompanied them, had I known of their intentions. But I promised myself a visit to that historic spot on my return trip, if circumstances would permit of it. At Kansas City, we took the Chicago and Alton R. R. to East St. Louis, Ill, and thence to St. Louis, Mo. Leaving Kansas City about 9 p. m. Sunday, we were all night speeding across the state of Missouri toward the rising sun. Before day break we had crossed the mighty father of waters and my waking eyes rested for the first time upon the lovely landscape of South Western Illinois, the mere mention of which will no doubt bring tears to the eyes of many of your readers when they recall that the soil of that queen State of the Union is stained with a prophet's blood. Turning south to E. St. Louis, we again crossed the Mississippi, and were at Old St. Louis, where we took the L. and N. R. R. to Nashville, Tenn. Twice that (Tuesday) morning we crossed that immense suspension bridge, spanning the Mississippi at St. Louis, which but a few days latter was twisted out of shape by a cyclone that did such damage to the two last named cities. Our course on this day was east ward, across the southern part of Illinois and Indiana, and thence south through Kentucky to capital of Tenn. Every station along the line that day was thronged with people, most of whom were colored, who had, no doubt, heard of the company of Mormon Elders on board, which was large enough to compel the conductor to attach an extra car, the two Squads of Elders having joined ranks at Kansas City. We arrived at Nashville, Tenn, about 9 p. m. on the 19th of May, when we were met by Jos. D. C. Young of Salt Lake City, Pres. of the middle Tenn. Conference and an other Elder. We soon continued our course south across Tenn. thence east through northern Alabama, and then north east to Chattanooga, Tenn., the headquarters of the mission, arriving at the Union depot about 2 a. m. the next morning. We went to the Rossmore hotel, registered, and retired to our rooms for the remainder of the night. Kneeling in prayer we then retired were soon lost to the bustle of the busy city below in the sweet land of dreams. Nephi M. Savage.

The American Economist makes the absurd claim that tariff governs the price of wheat in the United States. The editor of that Republican journal should consult with a practical farmer before attempting to write on a subject he is unacquainted with. Throughout the land, where farms are within easy reach of railroads, the farmer will tell you that buyers of wheat in any quantity always consult Liverpool prices before making purchases. And the farmer also knows that the surplus shipped abroad fixes the price for the full crop.—Ogden Standard.

Lives there a man with soul so dead,
Who always to himself hath said,
"I will not advertise?"
Yea, and now he's "busted" high,
'Cause printer's ink he did defy,—
You see he was not wise.
